Food Recycling Comes to Palo Verde Park

Palo Verde Park now has its very own FoodCycle drop-off site, ready for your kitchen scraps! Tucson's FoodCycle at Home program turns food waste into compost and mulch, helping our city reach its climate goals and keep extra material out of the landfill.

According to Tucson Environmental Services, the program has already diverted more than 800 tons of food waste and returned nearly 1,500 tons of compost and mulch back to the community.

Fruit peels, coffee grounds, eggshells, veggie scraps: all of it can be transformed into nutrient-rich compost for local gardens.

The bin is locked, but residents can get the combination by attending a quick 30-minute training session, where you'll also receive a free pail for collecting scraps at home.

Big Thanks to Tucson Fire

About 70 neighbors of all ages came out to laugh and get their splash on earlier this month, thanks to Tucson Fire.

It was pure nostalgic summer joy, and a reminder of how lucky we are to have first responders who show for our emergencies AND our celebrations.

TLC for the Kindness Tree

Sometimes even kindness needs a little tending. After an early July storm left the kindness heart on our eucalyptus tree a little askew, neighbors gathered to put it back into place.

Community is something we nurture together. #grateful for this little circle of care.
